AVERAGE JOB SATISFACTION IN THE US

With millions of people looking for new jobs in the wake of a shaken economy, it may be surprising to hear that most Americans are satisfied with their work.

However, there is also a crucial difference between having satisfaction in your work, and being passionate about your work. So, to find out more about how Americans feel about their jobs, this article will address everything you need to know about job satisfaction.

After extensive research, our data analysis team concluded:

- 65% of U.S. workers are happy with their job.
- But only 20% are passionate about their jobs.
- Likewise, only 49% of American workers report being “very satisfied with their work,”
- While 30% are merely “somewhat satisfied.”
- Over 100 million U.S. workers are at least somewhat satisfied with their work.
- The top reason Americans are unsatisfied with their jobs is income
- Only 28% of those making less than $24,000 annually say they’re in good jobs.
- Remote workers report higher levels of job satisfaction than in-office workers, at a difference of 57% to 50%.
- At least 26% of American employees want to leave their current jobs.

JOB SATISFACTION BY PROFESSION

In addition to income, the type of job someone has can also have a major impact on their job satisfaction. Despite income, many jobs in public service or humanities have high satisfaction rates. These rates seem at least somewhat linked with Americans finding “meaning” in their work. Here’s the breakdown:

Only 20% of Americans describe being truly passionate about their work.
Despite job satisfaction rates, there’s a lack of workplace passion in the U.S.

The jobs that employees consider most meaningful are often in Healthcare or Humanities.

Positions where over 90% of employees report high meaning: Clergy, English Language and Literature Teacher, Surgeons, Elementary Education Administrators, Radiation Therapists, Chiropractors. Psychiatrists, Anesthesiologists, Rehabilitation Counselors, Occupational Therapists, Kindergarten Teachers, and Epidemiologists.

The two main factors for high job satisfaction are “high meaning” and income.

All of the jobs with high job satisfaction provide either a high salary or high meaning. Here are all of the jobs where over 85% of employees report job satisfaction: Clergy, Education Administrators, Radiation Therapists, Pediatricians, Cartographers and Photogrammetrists, Rotary Drill Operators, Emergency Management Specialists, and Chief Executives.

Pediatricians and chief executives likely receive satisfaction from income.
Though several other jobs have greater high meaning rates than Pediatricians (88%) and Chief Executives (74%), they still have job satisfaction rates higher than 85%. This can likely be attributed to higher than average incomes, with Pediatricians making $149,000 per year and Chief Executives $126,000.

Those in the clergy have the highest rate of job satisfaction (90%).
Higher meaning really pays off for those in this position, as 90% of employees report having job satisfaction.

1/3 of people who make less than $25,000 have a job satisfaction rate below 50%.
Low income can cause less job satisfaction. Those who make less than $25,000 per year tend to report lower job satisfaction rates, with over 1/3 of jobs in this category having job satisfaction rates below 50%. These are the jobs with lower incomes that have job satisfaction rates of 50% or less: Hand Packers and Packagers, Fast Food Cooks, Cashiers, Photographic Processing Machine Operators, Short Order Cooks, Parking Lot Attendants, Dishwashers, Cafeteria Attendants, and Dry-Cleaning Workers.

Employees dislike having a lack of meaning.
Of the positions where less than 30% of employees report their job having high meaning, very few have job satisfaction rates above 70%. In fact, out of the 22 jobs with high meaning rates of less than 30%, 16 of them report job satisfaction levels below 60%.

Parking lot attendants have it rough.
With an average income of only $19,700 and high meaning rates of only 5%, it’s no surprise that Parking Lot Attendants have a meager job satisfaction rating of 41%.

Cafeteria attendants and dry-cleaning workers have the lowest levels of job satisfaction.
Both of these jobs have an incredibly low job satisfaction rate of only 39%.

HOW TO AVOID BURNOUT

Source: <https://www.indeed.com/career-advice/career-development/how-to-avoid-a-burnout>

By understanding the causes of burnout, you may be able to avoid it altogether. Here are some suggested steps to reduce stress and symptoms of burnout:

1. UNDERSTAND THE SIGNS AND SYMPTOMS OF BURNOUT

The first step in combating burnout is to understand the physical and mental symptoms. Burnout is often a very gradual process that increases over time. Here are some of the most common symptoms of burnout:

Physical signs: Physical signs of burnout may include frequent tiredness, headaches and body aches.

Emotional signs: Burnout may affect your emotions by severely reducing feelings of accomplishment, fulfillment and self-approval. It may cause a decrease in motivation, optimism and positivity.

Behavioral signs: Behavioral changes may include a lack of desire to socialize at work or increased procrastination. It might also include a decrease in punctuality and responsibility.

2. USE YOUR PAID TIME OFF

If you're a full-time employee, you likely accumulate paid time off for vacation and sick days. Consider scheduling a vacation to break away from work for at least a few days and enjoy your time by yourself or with loved ones. Plan time away to someplace new or just take the time to stay home and relax or finish a personal project you haven't had time for.

If you aren't feeling well one day, you may want to use your paid sick time to take the day off rather than pushing yourself too hard and showing up at work.

3. PRACTICE SELF-CARE

Self-care can get you in the right state of mind to avoid burnout.

Self-care can include:

- Exercising regularly: Exercising helps reduce stress by releasing endorphins, which improve mood and bring about a feeling of general well-being. Even a short 15-minute walk each day can help.
- Getting enough sleep: Being well-rested can increase focus and rational thinking, which contributes to more positive interactions and productivity in the workplace. Getting enough sleep can also increase positivity and motivation.

- Meditating: Practice breathing and relaxation techniques and other meditative routines to help you calm yourself and enter a state of restfulness.
- Pursuing a hobby: Finding a passion can help reduce stress and give you a break from the demands of the work week. Boosting your creativity outside of work can help increase your productivity at work and make you feel more fulfilled.

4. FIND PURPOSE IN YOUR WORK

Sometimes it takes some rediscovery of your purpose and the deeper impact of your work to improve your outlook. Think about how your work improves the lives of others and ways you could increase your impact to add more meaning to your daily responsibilities. Also, focus on what aspects of the job you enjoy, like talking to your coworkers. If you have a passion you truly want to pursue, you may decide to change jobs or careers to feel fulfilled.

5. DEVELOP HOBBIES

Having hobbies can give you a way to take your mind off of work and focus on something that interests you. Think about joining a book club and reading during work breaks or spending your weekends taking painting classes. This can be especially helpful if you have a monotonous job and feel the need to develop your creativity skills.

6. REACH OUT TO THOSE CLOSE TO YOU FOR SUPPORT

If you experience symptoms of stress or burnout, reach out to friends and family to receive support. Sometimes just talking with other people can reduce stress and loved ones may offer advice or help you take action to improve your situation if you want help. Also, trying to develop closer relationships with coworkers may improve how you feel about your job and help you feel more connected.
